THE CAVE MAN" is novel because it is rea!. It is so true to life that you shunder at the realization of it all The story opens like the flash of a gun. It is a modern and eloquent

Haulick Smagg (Mr. Robert Edeson) is a coal heaver. He is unkempt. slovenly and almost boyish in mentality.

Mischlef is a typical blase, society beauty who craves excitement. She formulates a plan and throws hulf of a five dollar bill out of her window with a note enclosed that the finder should please call at her

Haulick Smagg finds the note and calls for the other half of the five. Mischief decides on an escapade: she will win this cave man back to civilization. She will awaken a spark of mentality in his sleepy brain. Haulick Smagg is a good tool in the hands of Mischief He profits by her instruction and, in the garb of a man of leisure, attends many social fu. ctions. His dormant brain is awakened and he realizes his

But this awakening accomplishes more. His finer instincts develop and Haulick Smagg finds himself in love with Mischief. He would tell her of his love, but restrains himself. Finally, overpowered by the burden of his soul, he confe-ses his love to her, but Mischief sparns him. In his rage he wrecks his magnificent home and starts out in the world anew. He invents a new process of manufacture. The directors of the company pay him for his invention and make him superintendent

Fate t rows Mischlef la his path again and Haulick Smagg-manbrute -inventive genius-is ngain in the colls of a coquette. What would the average man do in a situation of this kind? Would he sit quietly back and let fate take its course, or would the instinct that prompts man to take his mate assert itself? The cave man wins in
